problem of the near east, and questions which had vexed European statesmen for generations past were now pressing for a definite and final solution. Of these questions the most delicate was that of the relations of the dual monarchy to Servia. Twice within the last five years that little country had caused incalculable loss and inconvenience to the empire, and it was essential to insure that such action should never be repeated. It was Austria's object to achieve this by coming to an understanding with Servia, and Austria-Hungary had patiently endured much provocation and great ma-terial losses in the hope of being able to establish her future relations with Servia on a permanent and friendly

France and Germany Will Be Sydney Buxton Compliments ors at 1916 Olympic.

By GEORGES DUPRESNE.

Special Cable to The Tribune PARIS, Feb. 8,-When ten days from today M. Poincare takes over the reins of the French state definitely he will make it the principal aim of his septennate to help along in every possible way the remaissance of the patriotic and national feeling which begau a few years ago.

There was a time whom many loval Frenchmen actually feared that their beloved country was doomed to become a second rate power in Europe, but these days of anxiety are over, and with one of Europe's first statesmen at the helm. France will undoubtedly within a very few years become the leading power on the continent, as she was indeed from the very beginning of the Balkan crisis. This is realized not only in France but also in Germany where practically the whole official press immediately after M. Poincare's election to the presidency agreed that although relations between the two countries are at present as correct as ever, Germany will have to watch the trend of events in France even more carefully than before.

Nobody here believes that Powerro is a jingo, or that he for a moment contemplates rushing the country into a war of revenge against Germany in order to get back the lost provinces of war of revenue against termany in order to get back the lost provinces of Alsace-Lorraine, but, on the other side, nobody doubts that he will do his utmost to strengthen the defences of France to such an extent that Germany would, here ware separt what she did in 1570.

frontier, would in the event of a German invasion, make it comparatively easy for the enemy to pour troops into France, so long as the Belgian army is not in itself strong enough to arrest the advance of the invaders. In its present condition any attempt to do so would be absolutely futile, but under the new organization the strength of the army in time of war will be doubted. Four army corps, comprising seven divisions, or half a million men, could be raised, distributed as follows: A field army of 100,000 men, a second line of 150,000 men, and a territorial force of 250,000 men. Half of this army would be composed of young highly-trained men of spiendid tighting material. It will be seen, therefore, that Belgiam's greater army is of vital importance to France.

Athletics Encouraged.

Unless the dreaded European conflagration should break out in the meantime, the first tug of war between Frenchmen and Germans will probably take place in the Olympic games in Berlin in 1916. It is known here that Germany is spending money like water in order to produce the champion athletes of 1916, and France is now equally determined that most of the laurels which the Americans do not carry off shall be won by the young men of rejuvenated France.

The growth of the interest in sport in France during the last year has been phenomenal and two months from now the first French College of Athletes will be opened at Rhelms, to be followed by others in all the principal cities. The aim of the colleges will be to ameilorate the condition of the population generally, to popularize a rational system of physical culture and to combat consumption and alcoholism by the encouragement of sports, whilst it will also be a training school for physical instruction. The institution will be directed by Lieutenant Hebert, chief physical instructor to the navy and an enthusiantic supporter of the cugenic theory.
